The Case of Major Iglehart

[Copyright, 2009, by American Press Association.]

It was a queer case, that of Major Iglebart. He was neglectful of duty, lovenly in appearance and drank hard. His uniform hung on him limply, his roat turned green, his boots were muddy, and his hair protruded through a Charges for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman-drunkennesswere preferred against the major. They were about to come up for trial when suddenly the enemy came down on us. The colonel led the retreat, the lieutenant colonel following in close order. Of the field officers the major alone was at the front. But he was not the officer we had known. He was manafigured. He sat erect on his horse, his eye lighted with the fire of battle, and his orders rang out in a clear, ringing tone. It seemed that he had returned to the being he had been before some great sin or some great grief had blighted him.

He found the men in confusion, some flying, some gathering their weapons and accouterments, some making an effort at formation. The moment he appeared, out of the struggling mass a line developed, and these running to the rear came back and re-enforced it. Seizing a standard, he called upon us to follow and, charging, saved the day.

After it was over all reverted to its former status. The colonel and lieutenant colonel resumed command, and the major got drunk. But the charges were quietly withdrawn. Though the major greatly lowered the moral and social tone of the regiment, he must be andured. Everybody felt that way -the field officers because he could lead the men in battle and they could not, the line officers and the men because they must have some one to lead them when there was aghting to do. No one thought of advancing the major to the position of colonel. Such a colonel would rule the regiment with the army. For a while we tried to treat him with consideration, but he was so shabby, so unsoldierly, to every way so degraded, that we soon gave it up and realized that our handsome colonel was still our commander.

And so it continued. When the colonel spoke to us, as he often did, in a pleasing and dignified manner, calling us "my boys," we cheered, but the first thing we knew we were following the major over breastworks or standing in line with teeth set, taking punisbment. Every time there was fighting to be done he loomed up at the front, and when it was over he sank back into his habitual stupor.

Under our colonel the regiment acquired an excellent reputation for discipline and soldierly bearing. Under the major's leadership in battle we become known as one of the most gallast bodies in the army. Of course the regiment must be honored in some ene's name, and it was impossible to honor us through the major. Therefore the colonel got no end of menflon for gallantry and eventually was made a brigadier general. That let the lieutenant colonel in for the bal- apples and pears every year. ance of the glory, all of which emanated from the major.

The major never made any complaint at the fact that all these bonors passed over his head. He didn't seem to care. Nor did any one in the regiment object. We all felt that our services should have recognition and considered that honors conferred upon him would be no recognition at all.

At the last fight the major fought the army was held in check by a bill on which the enemy had planted artillery, and everything was at a deadlock. The general rode up to our regiment and asked for the colonel and Nobody could tell him where they He asked for the next in com-Iglebeart was asleep on a fence rail him on the Cubs by that time, some near by. had a division." We all knew more about that than the general. The major in command of a division! Absurd! Yet there was something about the clay he had left behind-his former self-that made us forget his second self and think of him as a major general. With that look on his face we buried him, fired a voiley over him and forgot him till the only agreement the representatives of the workmen will sign will be one to lead us, we covered curselves with disgrace and after several such epiof the United Mine Workers of Amsodes were mustered out of the service with dishonor.

But to finish about the major. The day after he was killed a letter came for him addressed in a woman's hand. Not knowing what to do with it, the adjutant concluded to consider it a dead letter, open it for the address of the sender and return it. It read:

My Durling-Today my sun, which set when you left us, believing you a guilty man, has risen, though, oh, how sad! Will has confessed. You may now assume your own individuality and come back to us. Doubtless, coming as a solpack to us. Doubles, coming as a son-gier from the frost, you will have great influence in obtaining a pardon for him.
